Monongahela Incline to Remain Out of Service Through the Weekend

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE (January 5, 2024) - The Monongahela Incline will remain out of service through the weekend, Pittsburgh Regional Transit announced today.

Shuttle buses will continue to operate between the lower and upper stations during regular incline hours.

PRT is working with its contractors to ensure the 152-year-old incline is functioning properly and safely before it reopens. There is not yet a timeline for when that could occur.

The incline has been out of commission since Tuesday evening when multiple electrical and mechanical systems malfunctioned.

The systems that failed are covered under the existing contract of the rehabilitation project that closed the incline from August 2022 through March 2023.
